Research Interest

Leadership, Strategy, Organizational Adaptation, Technology, Microfoundations, Hybrid Work

My research examines how organizations develop and sustain adaptability in response to technological and environmental change through distributed strategic leadership, collective cognition, and organizational capabilities. Drawing on perspectives from dynamic capabilities, organizational behavior, and sociomateriality, I investigate how strategic coordination, knowledge integration, and decision-making processes emerge across organizational levels and digitally mediated work settings. Methodologically, I combine experimental, quantitative, and mixed-method approaches with a particular interest in cross-level and team-based collaboration processes.
